Your ballot in plain English — the five-minute tour

Somebody shared this with you because it works. You don't need to explore for an hour to figure it out — here's the whole thing, the way I'd walk you through it at your kitchen table.

1. Open it. Scan the code or tap the link that came with this sheet. No app to download, no account, no sign-up — it just opens in your phone's browser.
2. Enter your ZIP code. That's all it asks. Up comes your ballot — every race and every measure you personally vote on, and nothing that isn't yours.
3. Read it in plain English. Each race and measure is explained in everyday words, not legal language. Not sure which ward or district you're in? The site finds it for you — that's the part the paper pamphlet makes hardest.
4. Take the short quiz. Answer a few questions about what matters to you, and see which candidates line up with your own answers. It's a mirror, not a lecture — it never tells you how to vote.
5. Look the candidates over. For each one: who they are, who's funding them (the money trail, from public FEC records), and what they say in their own words — quoted, never twisted.
6. Build your pick list as you go. Tap your choices while you read. Save the list or print it, and take it with you when you fill out your ballot — kitchen table or voting booth, no memory test.
7. Vote. Fill in your ballot from your pick list. Mail it in time to be postmarked by Election Day, or drop it in an official drop box by 8 PM on Election Day.

GOOD TO KNOW

- It's free, and it's nonpartisan. Every candidate is measured by the same method, whatever their party. Nobody's thumb is on the scale, and sponsors never touch the scores.
- ¿Habla español? Tap “Español” and the site switches to Spanish.
- Save it like an app. One button — “Save VoterLens to your home screen” — puts it on your phone next to your other apps, ready for the next election too.
- Your rights, plainly. In Oregon, if you've finished a felony sentence and been released, your voting rights are back — you just re-register. The site explains it on the ballot page.
- Pass it on. The share button sends the link to anyone — family, your church, your crew at work. One share at a time is how this spreads.
